- Hala Roberts -

- The Energy Enhancement System -

The Energy Enhancement System is a technology that generates multiple bio-active life enhancing energy fields, including scalar waves. These allow cell regeneration, improve immune function, provide relief from pain, detoxify the body, elevate moods, and assist in balancing right and left hemispheres of the brain.

Twenty five years ago after having some negatively charged experiences with the current medical approach, Hala started to research alternative and complementary medicines with emphasis in the world of metaphysics.

Hala's fascination with the world of Quantum Physics and Metaphysics led her to blend the two together for a higher purpose. She was then introduced to various healing modalities and has acquired qualifications in Theta Healing, Kinesiology, Matrix Energetics, Reconnective Healing and QHHT (Quantum Healing Hypnosis Technology).

These taught Hala how to connect with the subconscious and identify 'stressors' in a client, and energetically take them out of the host's energetic field, to allow them to achieve a relaxed state and accelerate the healing process. As no two people are the same, so too are their solutions. Hala intuitively engages in the suitable energetic fields required for her client's needs.

From the Editor

Life is a wonderful thing and it is easy, when events overwhelm you, to say that life is hectic. Tempting as it may be, I know that life is life, an energy that allows me to be alive for a time. So it is not hectic, only events are. If we could visualise events as ‘tennis balls’, then in my court, the balls are coming at me faster than I can catch them, so inevitably a few will fall off.

Maybe it is not that bad. I still have a choice of which ball I catch and which I let go. All the while, my life is happily keeping me alive. The separation is essential, otherwise we lose our grounding.

One of those ‘tennis balls’ is a trip to China and Tibet next month. This is not an easy thing to organise. Glenn and I are planning to travel with our Chi Gong teacher and visit some sacred mountain retreats, in the Kunlun mountain range. These mountains separate China in the north with Tibet in the south, away from the tourist path. Special permissions need to be granted for access to each of these areas controlled by China.

So most likely the November issue of this newsletter will be composed on a train or a plane, but fear not it will arrive at your door on time, thanks to the internet and our wonderful Newsletter Team, ‘hats off to them!’

This Polish dowser, Leszek Matela contacted me to offer to hold a seminar for us. Unfortunately the timing of his visit to Sydney was not compatible with our meeting day, and he was not able to manage the Zoom meeting we suggested. So sadly we will miss hearing his dowsing wisdom. But he wrote an article for us on page 4. He can be contacted on 2radius@gmail.com

One of Leszek’s Polish compatriots, Jozef Baj, is a master pendulum maker. He still is the only source to obtain the Virtual Cone pendulum and the Universal pendulum, which allow very specific vibrations to be selected for detection (Virtual Cone pendulum) or generation (Universal pendulum). You will find a photo of his pendulum selection on page 7.

Until next time, ments. The researcher from Warsaw also proved the harmfulness of such radiation, called in the terminology of radiesthesia and geopathic stress.

In the hospital laboratory in Poznan, Urbanski with the participation of Prof. Antoni T. Jurasz, conducted clinical tests on animals placed in cages set over water veins and compared the results with the biological parameters of animals in neutral places.

Important investigations were made by: Prof. Wilhelm Rotkiewicz (he discovered that the main wavelength of global grid radiation, Hartmann's Grid, is 21 cm), Prof. Lech Radwanowski, who discovered the electromagnetic, acoustic and Quasi-Alfven waves in the radiation of watercourses, and Prof. Jerzy Mazurczak, who developed a method for determining the harmfulness of geopathic radiations based on photon emission measurements.

Scientific research in the field of dowsing is extremely important because many people still believe that this field of knowledge is fiction and even a fraud.

Pendulum with a soul

I was very surprised when years ago, while giving a lecture for dowsers in Tokyo, I heard from my Japanese listeners that they knew the equipment manufactured in Warsaw and consider it the best in the world. It comes from the workshop of Jozef Baj. Interestingly, it is valued not only by dowsers in Europe but also on other continents including Australia, where orders also come from.

Jozef Baj, from Warsaw, discovered his dowsing skills as a prisoner in the Nazi concentration camp in Auschwitz. There he met a Swiss named Rudolf, who taught him the art of using the rod and the pendulum, and because he had an extraordinary ability to tinker, he quickly made wonderful pendulums with just a penknife. These tools were often the only diagnostic and therapeutic means available in the camp conditions. Together, they made plans to set up a joint dowsers workshop after the war.

Both lived until the end of the war in the camp but the Swiss died shortly after, and Baj was employed as a precision mechanics technician in Warsaw.

The post-war years in the communist Poland were not conducive to taking up dowsing. However, when Jozef retired, he decided to devote his time to constructing dowsing equipment. In 1976 he took part in the first dowsing course organized by the newly established organization Association of Dowzers in Warsaw. Since its participants had nothing to practice on, he made pendulums. Their constructions became more and more perfect and their originality surprised even the most demanding users.

After a series of simple pendulums, Baj developed his own versions of advanced equipment respecting proportions and energetic qualities. This is how they were created in his dowsing workshop, the Universal Pendulum and Egyptian Pendulums (called Isis, Karnak and Osiris).

Soon there were also the first of his personal constructions that distinguished themselves with their capabilities, including the Simplified Universal Pendulum (UWU) for color therapy, the WP prophylactic pendulum or a collection of pendulums with the accumulator consisting of many natural herbs, micro and macro elements and minerals. They are transmitted vibrationally to the human body and are considered very beneficial.

Jozef made his products by hand, then 'tuned' them and controlled their quality and effectiveness. This may be the secret of their quality. What many people say about his products is that they are pendulums with a 'soul'. In order to pass on the secrets of his art to his successors, he employed two ladies in the workshop: Barbara Lesniewska in the 1980s and later Aleksandra Gondek, who continue his work to this day. Thanks to this, after the death of the master in 2006 the equipment is still produced according to his concept, and even new constructions are created in accordance with Baj's guidelines. An important collaborator of the Baj

Manufacturer, Andrzej Violoncellista, who has become a precision mechanics technician, designs excellent new models including, among others, unique disease-fighting pendulums called the Virus Killer and the Eye of Ra.

Jozef Baj has also developed new concepts in the field of dowsing. Pendulums such as 'White energy' - Karnak or Osiris - are constructed to emit the White Light Energy band instead of Negative Green. He created very useful therapeutic tools. Pendulums from the workshop of Baj have opened a new chapter in therapeutic radiesthesia. They are known, admired and used by many dowsers around the World.

Leszek Matela, is a well-known Polish dowser, journalist and author of 63 books in the field of radiesthesia, geomancy and nature therapy. For over 40 years he has been dealing with radiesthesia, places of power and geomancy. He conducts seminars and participates in international conferences. His email: 12radius@gmail.com.

Eliminating the Effects of Harmful Energy Lines

By Mrs. Enid Smithett

Reprinted from the British Society of Dowzers, September 1979

This is rather a loaded subject, as there are at least two schools of thought at every stage. Dowzing, however, is not the result of thought or of any school.

It is the experience of feeling and understanding and then acting accordingly. Some people do not believe in anything which they personally cannot see, hear, touch or smell, so it naturally follows that they miss quite a lot, both good and bad.

It is well known that certain dowzers are sensitive to certain things. That is how they find out. Usually this makes them so uncomfortable that something must be done about it; this is certainly so in the case of harmful underground water. There are a great many methods of dealing with these disturbances. I have come to the conclusion that the simplest possible way is the most satisfactory.

Nearly always there are surface indications before and after treatment, so you really can check your work and see, as well as feel, the difference. In this, your clients are of great assistance. I have found it best to be quite frank with them and bring them fully into the picture, as they are already quite deeply involved.

People have complained to me that I do not tell them how I do it. I do, but this time I will try to make it clear. If you can find underground water you can, with practice, find the exact centre of the water-line, its direction of flow and its depth, also its quality. I use colour for this last; there are other ways, and it is for you to find for yourself which suits you best.

Find out all you can from the map; this includes a sort of dress rehearsal to ascertain exactly what you are going to use to stop the influence of each water-line.

The simplest insulation is metal spikes, driven down to ground level. The kind of metal used depends on the sort of influence you have found at this point. Generally this falls into two groups. One kind seems to be magnetic, so that the iron spike driven in at the exact centre becomes itself a magnet, repelling the earth force which rises here.

The other kind is more difficult, it can be described as doubly-polarised. If one metal is used it appears to shut off the influence, that is, you cannot pick up the line of the water, but you can be affected by another influence, which you have not controlled. It will, in fact, find its way into the house by way of the wiring. Natural lines of force and the man-made kind are free to use all the facilities. Brass, being an alloy, will take care of this kind.

There is another disturbing influence which can find its way in, using the wiring as its carrier. This is from a nearby ley line, which can leave its normal straight course when it has been cut into; for example, by a new motorway or other alteration on the earth's surface, or the removal of ancient buildings and stone monuments and the placing of the new ones without regard to the natural contours, which are like pulses in the body of the earth, and which control the flow of the earth and cosmic forces. To protect the house from this, silver can be used where the wiring enters the house.

Since we are discussing neutralisation, I will touch on the reason for driving insulators down to surface level. When anything is placed in or on the surface it creates a field of its own, which changes what was perceptible before, so that the more obstacles you have on the surface the harder it is to discover and understand what is below the surface.

The iron and brass insulating rods, which I find the most practical, do not shut off the water, but they shut off the influences which arise from the water and act as a complete screen all the way downstream from the point at which they are placed, - the important thing being that they must be perfectly sited. If they are an inch out they either do not work at all or they may create something rather worse than you had before. So the work is done from a water diviner's point of view. I cannot understand how people could do this work unless they are experienced water diviners, because all the force lines, all the influences follow a similar rule and pattern to underground water.

I have been doing this work for a very long time and sometimes, when called to a house to help, the people tell me that, some years before, they had someone else to do it but it did not work. This is rather depressing, but it has always forced me to investigate to find the reason for failure.

Sometimes the insulation is in the wrong place, downstream instead of up, or the type of insulation is unsuitable or inadequate, so that the job was only partially done. This generally means that the symptoms have been suppressed, so that it is difficult to find the real trouble. We have to explore this very carefully, and I have found that quite often people have used diagrams, which are interesting and sometimes have an influence of sorts.

Diagrams fixed in a house have the effect of concealing all the symptoms, all the clues which usually tell us there is something wrong, but they have not cured the cause, only made it much more difficult to find and attend to. In using diagrams people tend to think that they have power in themselves, which automatically radiates indiscriminately wherever you put them. Although I like simplicity, this is too simple and falls into the category of superstition.

The example I give now is the most complicated job I have ever done and therefore the most interesting. It combines almost everything one could encounter in one place. It was also the longest time one is likely to spend on any one job. It took some hours of each day for a fortnight, but this was possible because we had arranged that I should stay in the house for that length of time. That naturally gave me the opportunity to check everything and to experience every possible sensation and occupational hazard.

The house is positioned on a hillside, and two cuttings have been made to obtain the levels for building. The upper one is a very old one and the probable site of the monastery which was once thereabouts. Now the only traces of the massive walls are deep in woods, and at the edge of what must once have been a road. Several springs rise to within a foot or two of the surface on parts of the level ground.

Some of these indicate very excellent spa water, but others are very mineralised, magnetic and disturbing. It was the presence of these which had brought me to this place, for they fell away with the land and passed under the house on the lower level. Below the top level, on the next ledge, runs the path, which must have been the ancient road or track, and is now a public footpath and the limit of the property.

The lower cutting is recent, to accommodate the house, and the driveway is a branch off the track. Where I had to work was along the top of the cutting beside the track, not very wide but thick with trees, bushes and brambles. On one side was a cliff about 20 feet deep or high, and so steep that a ladder was the only way up; on the other side, the track and the wire netting boundary fence, were not very negotiable.

There are ley lines, which change from blue to yellow where they cross a violet one, which itself is changed to blue at the lower left hand corner of the map. This one was on a neighbouring estate or hill farm, to which we did not have access.

It was perhaps just as well I did a map dowsing before I arrived and encountered the fall of the land and the general terrain. Until I reached there I was concerned only with the disastrous effect it was having on the health of the people living there. At the start, it was unpleasant and dangerous until a beginning was made to make the house habitable for the first night, and it was necessary to work as fast as possible. It was already late in the day and had started to rain. My client and host, Jean, came to help me, and it was his idea that he should climb to the top of the bank and put in the temporary stops, while I stood safely on the driveway below and directed and checked him.

We could not do more than a few that day, and concentrated on those lines which passed under the bedrooms. I left the map inside, out of the rain, but used small pieces of metal or quartz to block off all but the first one. This worked quite well and Jean, who could use a pendulum, was able to find the right place, while I sighted his position using a V rod. I had not tried this proxy dowsing before but it went well.

As Jean pushed in the stop, my rod slowly dipped with it and stopped when he did. We repeated this process with each point, as I removed the map blocks one by one. There was little time to check this, as it was getting dark, but we were satisfied that we had made a good start and could work well together. The reading I took along that part of the house, when we finally came inside, certainly showed improvement, so we hoped for the best, and indeed we all slept well that night.

The following day we proceeded in the same way and stopped all the lines of black water going under the house. There were several more beyond the sides of the building, which we did later on.

Now I could begin to examine the results. During the following week everyone in the house was a guinea-pig, and we all suffered every kind of emotion, because each day something new came to light; some things good, some bad. But each day one at least of our problems was solved, so we were making some progress.

We were all delighted to find that the large drawing-room, which had always had good vibrations, became better. This was the effect of the white water which dominated it, and itself neutralised the effect of the two or three lines of black water under it. After we had stopped the effect of the black ones, the whole place became much better and seemed lighter. Even the weather improved, although I can hardly take credit for that.

We now had several local problems, with which we were experimenting, because they were rather unknown quantities. These centred in the kitchen, which faced the cliff and was solidly packed with electrical equipment and had entirely fluorescent lighting. All of us noticed that it felt as if everything was switched on all the time. To me this was a definite indication of the nearness of a ley line, so I went back to the map to mark in the different coloured lines.

In the meantime I suggested to Jean that he should insulate with silver where the electric cable entered the house. This had the effect of taming things down. It did not completely cut it, however, so Jean, who is a non-smoker, generously produced a handsome silver cigarette case, for which he had never before found a use, and added this to our defence. That evening we had a much delayed meal, as we really had slowed things down. However, it was more comfortable. The only thing that really bothered us now was when the lights were on.

I was now ready to go out and deal with the ley line influence. The blue line above the footpath was the nearest to the house, and at one point came very near the corner of it. So we went up the path and on up the bank above, until we came to a point where the ley line left its original straight line, and seemed to branch off to the left towards the corner of the house.

We spent some time on this to make quite sure, and I decided to intercept the line at the branch and see what happened. I used a piece of quartz at the spot, and on checking found that the ley line had returned to the straight, thus moving quite a distance from the house. We thought that, in the past, the demolition of the monastery buildings may have caused the deviation.

What I wanted to do now was to find a point of a real junction of ley lines and try to control the whole of the local system, as the property seemed to be boxed in by ley lines. The map shows the ideal spot, where everything seems to meet, in the driveway soon after entering the grounds. When I walked down to this place I suddenly remembered the very strong feeling of well-being I had noticed when we first arrived by car, looking up towards the house.

It was a feeling almost of elation, but I had confused this with my delight at the very lovely view. Now I received it again, on foot, and with greater understanding. I was on a power point or pulse of the earth, where one finds peace and harmony. There are many of them about, if one pauses long enough to feel their power.

Some of them one can see, others feel, and all ancient places of worship were sited on them. The alteration or demolition of a building frequently breaks up or confuses the natural pattern. The ley lines are themselves an alteration, a running away of energy, a break or leak of power.

This was what I sought, and I meant to restore the original force to its proper place. This we did quite simply, Jean taking part in the small but satisfying ritual of restoration - first finding the exact spot where the ley lines crossed in the middle of the road, and making a six inch hole, into which we put our little piece of quartz, filling it in very carefully with small gravel, and pressing it firmly down.

The result was lovely, a great increase in the area of harmony. We used pendulums for checking with colour, but we also felt and experienced it. The ley lines had completely disappeared, and on checking the map later I found that the whole local system had gone. The house was no longer 'shut in'.

We took a rest for a little while and I began to think back over what had happened. I remembered that I still had not climbed that horrid bank to check our first efforts. It was near the end of my stay now, and I decided that this was the most important bit. I must not leave anything unfinished, so I slept on it to save time.

I found that three of the water-lines in the centre of the group were still alive, though not in the usual sense. Some influence was coming from them still, but not in lines below the surface. It was as though something blindly sought entrance to the house and found its way by the electric cable.

The three water-lines were those which passed under the centre of the kitchen. This work on the map did not seem to take long, but as I worked it had grown light and I looked up to see the sun rise over Lake Geneva, and I knew that I had almost finished the job and could go home.

Jean had placed white stones over the streams, all twelve of them, very close together. Each one was in the exact place, but the three in the centre were spiked with iron rods and they should have been brass. Looking back at our hasty start, I could quite easily see how this had happened. I had always been careful to make this distinction, but until now had not known how much difference it could make. I replaced the rods with brass and climbed down and checked everything again on the map. At last I was satisfied. Every new thing one learns brings the whole subject into sharper focus and nearer to harmony and balance, which is the whole object.

I will elaborate a little on the subject of the ley lines and power points. The pattern of the lines had rather pushed itself into the picture, quite unasked. This had happened on occasions before and had appeared to be an added complication, for which I had used silver to 'put it off'.

This one, however, refused to be 'put off'. I had come to recognise the ley line, not as a necessary evil, but as a definite influence demanding a place. Then, not being satisfied with this, I tried following it up. Since it had no use but was there, perhaps it would lead me to something that was useful.

This proved to be the right idea. The ley lines actually do come from something. If you follow them, using colour as your guide, you come to a point where the colour changes. This can be where it crosses another line, or where there is an old church or perhaps a standing stone. If the colour has been blue and it changes to yellow, this is on the decline and will not get better. If it changes to violet you are getting to the source, and very near here is where it began.

If you can succeed in bringing home a ley line and restoring the power to this pulse in the earth's body, and are then able to feel and recognise the source of energy, harmony and sanctuary, you will understand that our remote ancestors once knew, respected and preserved these places. They left clues for us to find them again.

Nuggets of Animal Wisdom

Kerstin Jung

Watching a young sparrow at our stable, I worry that he has fallen out of the nest, wonder whether his parents will find him and feed him, does he need anything... He hops around and sends me his thoughts:

“You don’t have to worry so much. Most things here in the world work very well and as they are supposed to without you interfering. You have to make sure that whatever you do, you understand and minimize or reverse the effects. And take what you need and stop hoarding”.

I had a moving encounter with a robin and a blackbird in the middle of Cologne. The buildings and streets are grey and dusty surroundings, not a lot of green or nature, me walking by and seeing them searching around:

“All is not lost yet but rather there is so much to gain. If you love the sun, learn to love the shadow and the rain. Our world is drying out because we only focus on the sun and want the shadow to be gone. But the shadow asks for the same focus and acceptance as the light.”

“This is the world of duality. If you want light, there will be shadow. Where there are mountains, there will be valleys. Embrace the light as well as the dark. We animals call the dark, the shadow, a heavy energy. It nourishes but also weighs down, especially if there is too much and it cannot be digested anymore. You want the sun and avoid the shadow, but your only focus is on all that is heavy, lifeless, and tiring. You do so much all the time and never rest, admire, or value things. You are out of balance. Learn to value the dark. Split your focus evenly.”

“The danger for us is that the closer we live with people, the more we can become as zombie-like as you are. We have to be so loud here, draw attention to ourselves to get space. If you have to fight too much for your space against too great powers, you will die at some point.”

Suzan Vaughn

I asked my cat friend, Mr. Milo, what he might offer for planetary healing. He said:

“Some animals give themselves for food. I live in the city. I am a carnivore and, for the most part, I rely on humans to feed me in my current incarnation.

But my food sometimes has meat in it from animals who are mistreated in their mission to become food. It is lacking in its full nutrition because of that. Animals that offer themselves as food need to be treated well in order to offer the proper sustenance down the food chain.

Become aware. I have a primary person, but I belong to a village of humans. I serve a lot of different people in different ways. I am not visiting you for food all of the time. Sometimes I come for connection and to say hello.”

Marcia Barclay

When I asked my cat, Pancho, what we can do to help heal the earth, he was concise in his response:

“Humans can stop being so greedy and selfish. They could extend their circle of caring just a little bit farther beyond themselves so that they care about just a slightly larger bubble than what they are currently in. Like my humans caring for and tending the land around our house. If everyone just extended their boundaries for love and respect a little more, you could almost cover the world! “

When I was worrying about bee death while watching bees in my garden, I suddenly heard:

“Replace your sorrow with love.”

Feeling Peaky

By Gill Hale

Reprinted from the British Society of Dowsters, April 2010

As a feng shui practitioner, I normally deal with the effect of houses and environments on people. This often has a geopathic stress element and occasionally involves dealing with a variety of ‘stuff’ which becomes attached to the disturbance and adversely affects the inhabitants. The wonder of dealing with ‘unseen energy’ is that there is always something new to experience and ‘it keeps me on my toes’.

I recently had a telephone call from a lady whose Pekingese dog (Gertie) was ‘poorly’. Over tea with friends, the dog had been given a healing, after which she had become ill and stopped eating. As an epileptic, the dog has a regular Holistic Therapist / Dowser who suggested the possibility of there being something wrong with the energy in the flat, which had affected the healing. This is where I came in.

I don’t normally have a great deal to do with animals, being a vegetable grower and therefore pathologically averse to neighbouring cats. I’m also a heavy sleeper which precludes me from early morning walks in the park with dogs. This case intrigued me though and I agreed to ‘have a go.’

Having gone through the usual procedures “Can I?” – “Yes”, “May I?” – “Yes”, “Should I?” – “Yes”, I felt there was another question to be asked. Yes, I ‘Can’, ‘May’ and ‘Should’ dowse for the earth energies, but what about the dog? The answer here was a resounding “No”, which suited me well enough, since it meant that I was not interfering in another’s healing activities.

I sought permission from the dog owner’s friend to investigate the energies in her flat where the healing took place, and also from the dog owner, to check the flat where the dog was currently sick. Having protected everyone and called on the appropriate people ‘upstairs’ for help, I discovered and dealt with negative earth energy lines, or geopathic stress in both homes. I felt the presence of negative earth energies alone didn’t explain why the healing had not been successful.

On further investigation with the help of my pendulum, I discovered that the dog had an attachment, something not of the earthy plane, which was obviously keen to ‘get in on the healing act’ and was ‘vamping’ on the dog. This was as much as I needed to know, since I am not keen to attract too much attention from unwanted energies. Once discovered, the usual ‘helpers’ were called in to carry off the offending energy to the appropriate place and my work was done.

Having reported my findings, I had a telephone call two days later to say that the dog had ‘picked up a bit’, but was still not eating too well. This is not too surprising as those who deal with earth energies are aware, as in homeopathy, things tend to take a turn for the worse before they pick up. A week later, the dog was back to normal, and I felt greatly relieved.

The phenomenon was new to me and I thought I’d share it, with permission from those involved. The initial healing had obviously been successful, but who would have thought it could be sabotaged by a lurking vampire?

Addendum:

Anne Morley (Gertie's regular Holistic Therapist / Dowser) added the following:

I found that a fluid extract of Passiflora (passion flower), Hawthorn and Broom would correct the problem, and rang to advise the owner accordingly.

Gertie was treated with 8 drops of the fluid extract daily from 30th October and her heart rate increased to 85 over the next 2-3 weeks, but Gertie was still not well. The last problem caused by the 'stuff' lurking at the original healing, was finally identified on 24th November when blood tests showed that Gertie had quite suddenly developed kidney failure.

Her vet immediately put her on Ipakitine, a product made from crushed shells, to help remove the toxins and I put her on Kidney Liquecence, a complex homeopathic product to help, support and repair the kidneys. She started treatment on 24th November, when her kidneys were 75% below normal function according to my dowsing.

By 29th November her kidneys had improved to 65% below normal, and Gertie was hugely improved, and I could see no reason why she should not make a full recovery. As Gill has said, the healing itself had been successful, but it had been sabotaged by some lurking energy, in spite of the best protection efforts of the lady who did the healing.

Co-operation between a Feng Shui Practitioner / Earth Energies Expert, a Vet and a Health & Healing Dowser is not something one expects to find, but in this case, one feisty little dog is getting back to normal as a result.

A Note From Raymon

Howdy Folks.

As you know, I use the quote, 'Energy Follows Thought' quite often. This month am sending you two videos of how it works.

Honey bees have a lot of intelligence, and can transform pollen from flowers and tree blooms into honey.

In the Spring of the year they reproduce fast and create a special cell in the bee hive for their future queen bee. The queen bee is much larger than the other bees.

After the queen emerges from her cell, she will leave the hive and a few thousand bees will follow her. This is called a bee swarm.

They all fly around in the air until the queen lands on a tree limb, or fence post or most anything else. In this video the queen and her 'swarm' chose a locust tree.

When the bees swarm on a small tree limb, it is usually easy to cut the limb and hold it over a bee hive, shaking the bees off into the hive.

In this case, the bees chose the side of the tree a few feet above the ground. I set a box at the bottom of the tree, they set an empty bee hive on top of the box.

Then I 'talked to the bees' and IMAGINED them crawling down the tree into the bee hive. Also used my hands in a motion to direct the bees into the hive.

They followed directions well, right into the bee hive.

Now, before you start sending me emails asking

“Can I do this so my cat will stop scratching the couch? Can I stop my dog from jumping on people? Can I get my kids to listen to me?”

And hundreds of other questions, will give you my standard answer now:
“Try it and find out!”

The Dowsing Societies seem to have a law that says:

“You can’t do anything without permissions.”

I HAVE NEVER BELIEVED THIS.

I did not ask the bees if I could give them directions to go into their new home.

I have never asked permission of an abusive person to prevent them from harming someone.

I never asked permission of the teachers or principal to clean up a school.

Future Trends in Healing

- Noel Auckland -

Having spent 54 years as a Medical Radiographer and being backstage to establishment treatments of all kinds, Noel has become aware of the many other forms of therapy and healing available.

He firmly believes that the body is capable of its own healing. Noel's interest and research in this area led him to the conclusion that the use of artificial chemicals masks symptoms, and forces the body to make unnatural adjustments.

This is preventing the natural healing which responds to the correct stimulus.

Noel's talk will cover re-emerging modalities utilizing external electrical frequencies, modalities which he feels will have a bigger impact in the future as awakening occurs.

- The Celtic Stone Method -
- Jane Ruehmkorff -

An introduction to The Celtic Stone Method of Adjusting Earth Energies as developed by Peter Ruehmkorff.

Since Peter's death in 2013, Jane has continued doing Environmental Property Surveys. She will explain their method used to change the earth radiation in a home, by suppressing the detrimental 'negative' lines, in order that the 'positive' lines can emerge, usually resulting in a more harmonious and less stressful sleeping and living environment.

In this introductory talk Jane will explain how Peter discovered the Celtic Stone method by trial and error in 1994, outline the way it is done and dowse some river stones for polarities. Jane will discuss checking for detrimental artefacts and ghosts once the stones are placed and the negative energies removed.

People often get sick sleeping on harmful energy lines and they improve after moving their beds. This method (which was discovered after the article was written in 1987) equalises the whole house for family harmony and healing without having to move beds.

Peter's handbook 'Equalisation of Harmful Earth Radiation' will be available in hard copy or e-copy and a hands-on seminar can also be arranged at a later date (max 4 students and the same number of homes) if you want to learn hands-on how to practise this method.

Bring your pendulums and come and enjoy an afternoon expanding your mind.
