- Cyclic Wisdom for Soul Care -

Cyclic wisdom is available to us in many ways on a daily basis. It is accessible for our observation and application in many layers.

My learning and education in Shamanic practices has reawakened my innate knowledge of this tool for guidance, support, deeper learning and understanding of self, and therefore soul care.

Our nature as beings of the Earth is influenced and intertwined with the rhythms of the earth. We can know this and access this in multiple ways. We can do so in our daily cycle: of emerging, acting, reflecting and resting; in our monthly cycle, with the phases of the moon and also more directly for women in the phases of the menstrual cycle; and we can access this knowledge in a yearly seasonal cycle with weather and nature.

We are also taking part in a much bigger life cycle, which moves through progressive stages of development, often marked by rites of passage.

Within this multi-layered 'map' there is much opportunity for growth and learning, with possibilities of deepening our knowledge of self and life through each cyclical evolution.

From the Editor

It is very clear that Dowsing evolved because of a need. At first it was the need to find good water. When things settled and life became sufficiently liveable, other needs arose.

There is an abundance of imagery showing dowsers plotting lands for settlement, and dowsing to find metal ore.

How does dowsing work? I do not know, but like Edison said, “I do not know how electricity works, but I can use it”.

You may think that you will never have a need to find your own water source; this may be true, but a time may come when cities are no longer liveable and you may choose to live in a more country-like environment. For example, in Vermont, north-east USA, to get a loan from the bank for a piece of land, you need to have found water on it.

So this month we have a few articles about the theory of finding water, how to make your own L-Rods, and some stories about finding water. You never know when you will need it!

In these challenging times many people are affected mentally and energetically. For many the future is bleak and foreboding. I found a hope filled article which I want to share with you ‘The Energy of the New Earth’ on page 18.

I do not know myself what the future will hold, but I can do with some hope that things will be good, and that mankind will pull through these strange times.

Until next time,

François

The Capacitor Theory of Water Divination

By J.C. Orsak

Reprinted from the American Dowser, Winter 2019

Was Moses' divining rod a scientific instrument, or was it a 'hoax?' Moses found water for the thirsty and dejected children of Israel by using his staff, according to the Biblical account in the Old Testament, but could this discovery of water be related to other similar methods of divining water through the use of rods?

Modern scientists and engineers are prone to debunk the theory of finding water by means of a rod, asserting that water is found 50% of the time which is the average of any chance.

Most cite the German Kassel experiment as a good scientific double-blind study debunking the phenomenon, but without a good theory on how water dowsing works, it is difficult to design an appropriate experiment.

Some years ago, a young engineer, fresh out of college, was introduced to the 'Mystic Method' of finding underground pipes by using two bent welding rods as 'feelers'. As all sceptics are, this engineer would not believe until shown by actual demonstrations, and by finding underground pipes himself in an area which was uncharted. The finds were 95% correct. This made a believer out of him, although there was no scientific proof or foundation for the phenomena.

Using the rod technique, over a span of 10 years produced results in locating underground pipes, channels, and voids in the subsoil. Being curious, experiments were conducted on known pipelines under various surfaces such as asphalt, gravel, rock, grass, concrete, steel slats, and wood. The conclusion was reached that the force on the rods was not affected by the surface conditions.

Near Rome, Italy, at the site chosen for a new plant construction, this engineer used the rod method to find water in an area known to be in a dry zone. The surrounding property wells could produce only 0.5 to 2.5 litres per second of water. However, using the rod method, a well was brought in that produced 8 litres per second of limpid water. The first water bearing strata was reached within 7 meters, and a gravel seam 15 meters in depth was discovered.

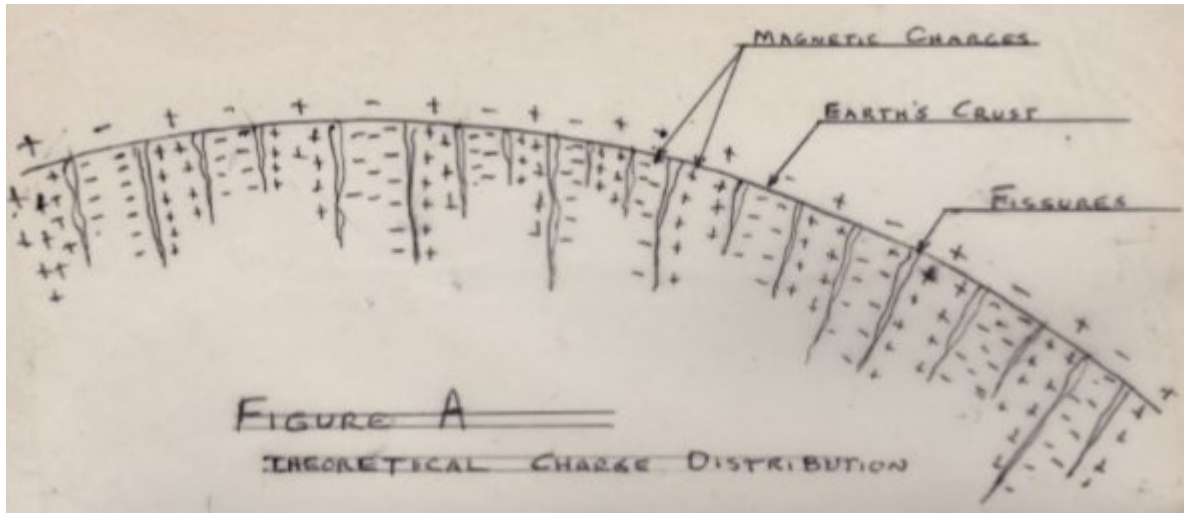

The theory of the rod method is puzzling, in that not enough actual controlled data is available. But for the information of those 'would be water finder', who are interested, the theory is this: Using static electrical charges which are present in the earth's surface, (see fig. A), the same principle of a lightning rod applies. Before elaborating on the theory, it must be clearly stated that:

- a. The rod method does not indicate water as such; it indicates a fault in the earth beneath the topsoil region.
- b. The effect on the rod does not depend on the ground surface.
- c. The material of the rod can vary, but best results are obtained with a long slender pointed mild steel or brass rod.
- d. The depth of the fault is not determinable by dips or bobs of the rod.

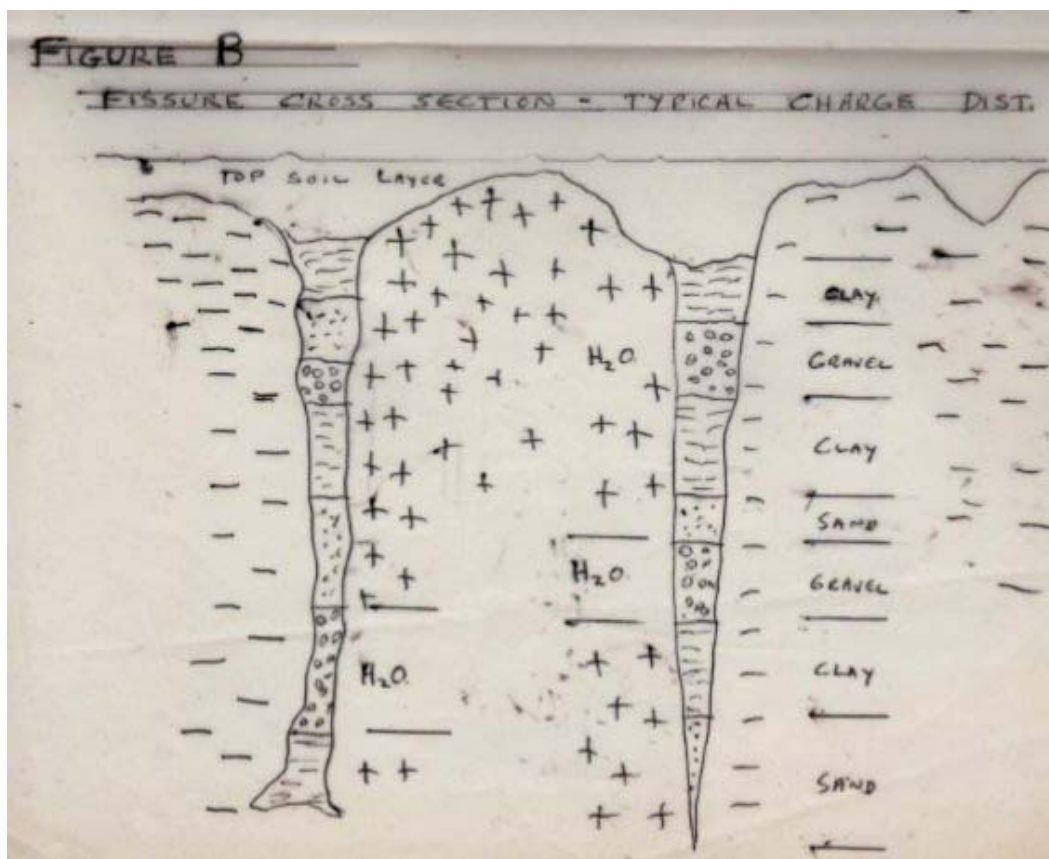

It is a known fact that the earth's outer layer contains magnetic charges, positive or negative, in varying degrees and locations. It has also been shown that some people using the dowsing method can detect slight variations in magnetic fields.

It is this writer's theory that as one stands on a positively charged vault beneath the topsoil of the earth's surface, the positive charges tend to charge his body and the rods he holds. As he steps over a fault, which es-essentially is a large capacitor, the negative electrons grouped on the opposite side of the fault draw down the positive charges (discharge them) and replace them with negative charges. This causes the rods to move and align themselves along the path of neutral charge, thereby indicating the fault. (See figures below)

Figure A shows the theory that the earth is a huge dynamo spinning in space, charged alternately positive and negative, this in turn would generate magnetic lines of force. These lines would tend to draw the rods parallel to the direction of the fault when stepping from one charge to the opposite charge.

Figure B shows an expanded view of a theoretical fault and how the charges would distribute around a fault. The curious thing about the action of the rods is that once a fault is discovered, it is possible to trace out the 'map' of the fault by following the line of neutral charge along the trace.

An accurate map can be made of the fault or of any other underground obstruction which would separate the charges.

This theory can be expanded to include geological explorations, since it is not known for sure how deep the fault is that the indicators will show. It is proven to work at 93-100 meters or around 300 feet. How much deeper it will indicate is not known, and much research is needed to prove or disprove this supposition.

However, it would be logical to say that the rods could indicate a division of charges whether at a depth of 10 feet or 1000 feet or more, so long as the earth is charged due to a fault extending to even 1000 feet.

Since it is more logical to find water in a fault area composed of gravel and sand versus a mound of hard rock or clay, the chance of finding water in a fault is much greater otherwise, and the chances of success in finding water at a shallower depth is multiplied many times.

It is this author's belief that this 'tool of science' should be thoroughly investigated, and that all pros and cons of this matter be scrutinized so that a new understanding of that old 'Mystic Method' of finding water can be exploited and put to practical use; as well as expanded into a more useful geological tool for use in underground explorations, foundation engineering, and increasing the world's fresh water supply.

Etheric Implants and Removal Protocol

By Kristen M. Kirby

Reprinted from the American Dowser, Autumn 2019

I was first introduced to energetic or etheric implants in the same way I was introduced to many metaphysical concepts - by working on clients in my healing practice, finding something unfamiliar, and allowing my curiosity to lead me.

Several years ago, I noticed that some of my clients who were suffering from depression, had what looked like a cap attached to their crown in the etheric layer of their energy field.

Removal was as simple as taking the cap off using clairvoyant visualization. Over time I began to notice many other types of these 'devices' in my healing sessions. Each device seemed to have a different function, and most were capable of blocking or redirecting the energy flow in an individual's body.

With further research, I discovered that I wasn't the only healer or clairvoyant who was seeing these 'etheric implants.' I began to catalogue the different implants I came across and discovered that both beneficial and detrimental implants are in use.

Beneficial implants are often placed before birth with our permission by higher dimensional beings. They are programmed to activate certain parts of our DNA to trigger spiritual awakening, past life memories or skills, and many other helpful tools at a specific time in our lives.

Detrimental implants, on the other hand, are placed by unhelpful entities to inhibit the growth of consciousness in an individual. In cases where my clients were suffering from psychic attack, chronic depression or anxiety, sudden onset of malaise, or strange pains in the body with no medical explanation, their energy field would often be riddled with these devices.

Over time, it became clear to me that etheric implants were directly associated with limiting beliefs or fears within individuals. Fears create weak spots and holes in the auric field and leave us vulnerable energetically. I could remove the implants for temporary relief; however, any permanent solution always involved identifying and releasing a fear or limiting belief in the individual. Otherwise, the implants would simply return in time.

I have also found that even if an implant is left in place, it will eventually fall off on its own as an individual heals any fears associated with the implanted device. Etheric implant removal can be a time-consuming process when performed clairvoyantly. But these devices can be removed quickly and easily through dowsing healing protocols. Dowsing significantly speeds up the process, and makes implant removal accessible to anyone regardless of their healing skills, training, or intuitive abilities.

When dowsing to remove detrimental etheric implants, it is imperative to not only dowse to remove the implants, but to also dowse to release any limiting belief patterns after the implants have been removed. If you choose to implement a dowsing protocol to remove etheric implants, always ensure that the removed implants are replaced with white light, and that any released belief patterns are replaced with the wisdom of your own consciousness as part of the protocol.

My tests of dowsing for implant removal have shown that all unhelpful implants can typically be removed at the same time, regardless of the number. I believe this is because they are not natural energetic structures, only affect the individual they are attached to, and have no consciousness of their own.

With this dowsing protocol, many implants may be permanently eliminated by also removing the associated limiting belief patterns involved and by replacing those patterns with conscious knowing.

You may find that some of the implants you have removed return after a period of time, if the associated belief or fear has not been released. So this protocol can be repeated as necessary. Even temporarily releasing implants can improve conditions and aid in the personal growth process, causing the implants to have less impact over time.

Often one will notice immediate positive shifts after this implant removal protocol has completed, such as lighter moods, more energy, less ruminative thinking, and relief from pain.

In some cases, chronic complaints can be completely cleared simply by removing etheric implants from the body when present. As with all healing tools, sometimes the simplest methods work the best and have the greatest impact on our health and well-being.

How to Dowse a Water Well

By Susan McNeill Spuhler

Ozark Research Institute – Summer 2021

Water, our most precious resource, isn't always readily available to us through a river, stream, or faucet. There are times when special skills must be implemented to acquire it. Having been a water dowser for 30 years, people find me in all sorts of unusual ways. One of my latest dowsing customers came to me via their indefatigable attempts to find a dowser who was able to come to his property, AND knew what they were doing.

Dylan lives an hour from me in Western Massachusetts. He built his home five years ago and had a well drilled for $20,000. Unfortunately, the water had contamination issues so he needed a new well. A local dowser came over, spent 10 minutes, charged $200 (instead of $400) and found a spot 10 feet from the original well, and said they only needed to drill 100 feet to find water.

When I arrived at Dylan's home and he told me the story, I was shocked to see that a dowser ignored the eight acres of land that surrounded the home. I worked with my customer for nearly four hours teaching him how to dowse with the L-Rod, Y-Rod, pendulum and bobber. We map dowsed the property and found several excellent veins. Once the well driller arrived, an excellent well was drilled. The water was pristine at the gallons per minute and depth I stated when I dowsed the property.

When I dowse for a well, I ask for eight specific characteristics. I ask that the water is potable (drinkable), it tastes good, it smells good, is present year-round, is at an appropriate depth, has an appropriate flow of x gallons per minute, is easy for the well driller to get to, and finally is beneficial to all who drink it.

Once I state my intention, I map dowse the property by slowly moving a ruler (in the horizontal position) from the bottom of the map to the top of the map with my right hand. In my left hand I hold my pendulum. When I get a reaction from my pendulum, I stop and make a tick mark along the left side of the map. I generally get 5 or more indications and make the tick marks.

When I reach the top of the map, I turn the map 90 degrees so that the tick marks are at the bottom of the map. I then take the ruler and push it towards the top of the map again following each tick mark, one at a time. This is like plotting a graph.

Once I dowse the map, I go out to the property and walk it with L-rods. I ask the above mentioned eight questions and my L-rods will point me in the direction of a water vein. When I reach the vein, my rods will open up. I place marker flags along the first edge of the vein then ask for the second edge of the vein.

A vein is an underground stream or river. I carry an orange bucket with L-rods, Y-rods, surveyor's paint, surveyors' flags and a 45 metre-long measuring tape. I keep my pendulum in my pocket.

With both edges of the vein being discovered, I place marker flags along each edge. I walk the vein (between the marker flags) with the Y-rod and ask where the best place to drill a well is. The Y-rod will twist out of my palms and face the ground when I'm over an excellent vein; I may find several veins with several well spots.

I will mark the spots with a marker flag, and then paint a bull's-eye with marker paint around the marker flag. I will sometimes 'hear' the number of feet to drill and gallons per minute that the well will produce, or I can use my L-rod or pendulum over a chart I have with me or, 'see' an imaginary chart in front of me with numbers appropriate to the task at hand.

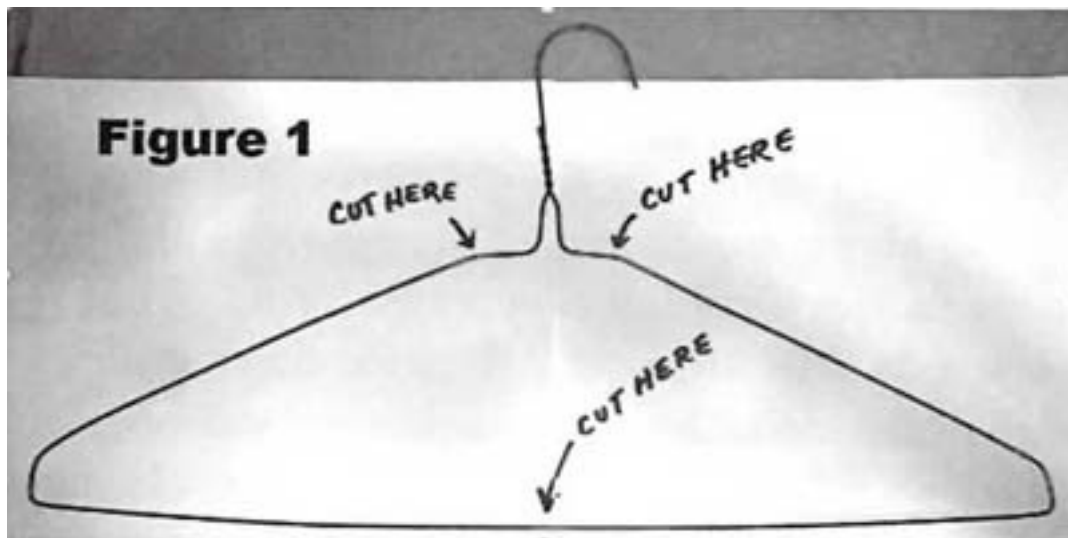

When I make L-rods, I will sometimes use a metal coat hanger and snip each side of the hook and the bottom centre of the hanger. I will 'size' the rod by bending it to fit the palm of each hand, and then place short straws over the part of the rod I will hold. A key on the end of a string can be used as a pendulum.

How to make a simple or sensational L-Rod

Making your own simple dowsing tools is easy, takes minutes and is basically free. Find a metal coat hanger, a set of wire cutters, a pair of scissors and a plastic straw.

Figure 3: Bend each wire to make the letter L. Take a set of needle nose pliers to create the appropriate 90 degree.

Cut a plastic straw so it fits in the palm of your hand. Slide it onto the short end of the wire before bending the rod.

Now for the sensation L-rods. Materials and tools needed:

Bunnings or any welding shop will have brazing rods. They will be 2.4mm and 92 cm long, copper tubing also from Bunnings or any hardware store with an inner diameter (ID) of 3.2 mm and an outer diameter (OD) of 6.4 mm, bolt cutters, pipe cutter, needle nose pliers or small wire cutters, marker, ruler.

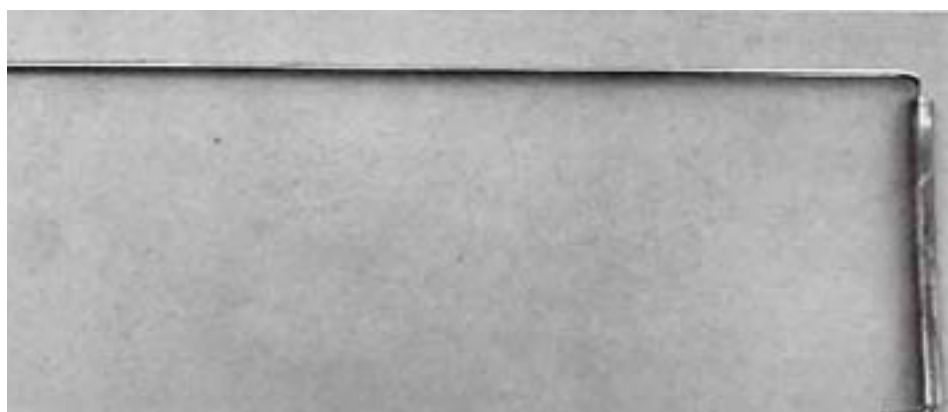

Measure 46 cm on the 92cm long brazing rod and cut it. Take each rod and bend one end to make a 19cm 'L'. Use your pipe cutter to make a 10cm length of copper tubing. You can also measure the palm of your hand to make it a comfortable fit. Alternatively use the tube from a Bic ball pen or similar.

When using a pipe cutter, make the opening so that your copper tube fits snugly, then gently tighten/twist handle and make a complete turn with your tool. Tighten the twist handle gently again and make another rotation. Do this until you have cut through the copper tubing. Use the V shaped point of the pipe cutter to rub inside of the end of your tube/L-rod handle to remove any metal burrs/edging so you don't get cut. Make two handles.

Once you make your handles and rods with a small 'L' at the end, slide one copper handle onto each rod. Bend the long part of the L-Rod so that it is at 90 degrees and pointing in the same direction as the small 'L'.

A Note From Raymon

Howdy Folks

Last month I wrote about Honesty and due to the emails received about people being deceived and cheated, thought this letter should be about crooks.

Am amazed at the bad choices people make that takes their money. It ranges from giving your personal information to an unknown caller who steals your money from your bank account, to paying full amount in advance for repair services that never get done.

Here is how I answer the phone when an unfamiliar number appears on my caller ID : “Are you sure you have the right number?”

If the caller asks “Is this Raymon Grace?” my question is, “Who wants to know?”

OR, if the caller quotes my address and asks if it is correct, I ask “Why do you want to know?” NEVER give an unknown caller ANY information.

The list of thieves is long but the one that gets my attention are the people who claim to be ‘healers’. Am hearing more stories of them, I thought it beneficial to pass the information on to you. Yes, there are legitimate healers with good reputations and there are those who prey on the unsuspecting victims.

They demand LARGE sums of money to ‘cure’ you. They want this money in ADVANCE. Then if you don’t get well, it is YOUR fault or if you die, well, you won’t ask for your money back.

The ‘healer’ may tell you that you have demons, curses and other dangerous problems, and for several thousand dollars they will assure you a cure.

Yes, demons do exist, but I have NEVER found one affecting the calibre of people who attend my class or receive my newsletter. Yes, there are some people who live in haunted houses, through no fault of their own, and removing them is fairly simple.

Yes, there are some people who just made bad choices and get themselves in trouble. It is these self proclaimed ‘healers’ you need to be aware of, the ones who use fear and intimidation and want LOTS of YOUR money up front.

The fact that you are reading this, indicates you know something about dowsing. Learn as much as you can and USE IT to measure the integrity of a person who is trying to take your money.

Most people never ask me about hiring a repair service or investor or healer, but then, after they have lost their money, they write and ask me to get it back for them. Life doesn’t usually work that way.

So, for you who are wondering how much I charge for my services, here is my answer. I decline to take money BEFORE working on people.

I have never sent anyone an invoice. Never charged a fee except for classes. I tell people to send a gift of the amount THEY feel it is worth.

There are some people I am sure I cannot help, so I send them an email saying, “If I can’t help you, it is not fair to take your money.”

In my opinion, this is a fair way to do business. People may not like my blunt attitude but none can say I cheated them.

The Energy of the New Earth

By Gerrit Gielen,

Reprinted in part, from <https://spiritlibrary.com/>, August 2021

When we think of Earth, we may see a beautiful blue planet floating through space: a sphere of matter orbiting the star we call the sun. A beautiful image, but also a view of the Earth from a materialistic point of view.

In reality, the Earth is much more complex than that. It is a multidimensional system that allows for its inhabitants a wide range of experiences: parallel realities exist in this system, dynamic interactions between past, present and future. And, above all, we can discover ourselves, our inner infinity.

We as humans do not have just one past, one timeline to which we are bound. It is better to compare us to a tree that has many roots: in the present, where we are, many timelines converge. The multidimensional system that is the Earth makes this wealth of diversity possible.

Here we can experience unity, peace, beauty and love. Also hate, violence, anger and ugliness. The Earth system gives room to experience duality to the fullest; and yet we are constantly reminded of the oneness that unites us all. After a dark night full of fear, we can still enjoy a beautiful sunrise. Every flower here reminds us of the higher realities.

People here are able to create beautiful music, but also to start pointless wars. The special energy of the Earth gives us the space to realize both possibilities. It is this special property of the Earth that makes the experience of being human fully possible.

That Earth is now beginning a new cycle makes us ask: “What does this mean for us, its residents?”

A new cycle: a higher energy

When a human or other being starts a new cycle – and therefore has completed an old cycle – a higher vibration arises. A higher vibration means that consciousness is approaching the source, and has a stronger experience of beauty, truth and the unity of life.

The Earth is in such a new cycle. This shifts the experiential space that the Earth offers humanity upwards. At the top, cosmic unity experiences, and connecting to higher realms, become more possible than ever before. At the bottom, extreme dualistic experiences are becoming less and less possible. Events such as starting a cruel and pointless war are then no longer possible.

For the average person’s experience, this means that we are reaching a turning point. At the moment in this world, we usually experience division. It is only when we meditate or are in nature that we experience a sense of unity. This has a number of consequences, of which I would like to mention a few.

Science

Today’s science thinks from the paradigm of division. Everything consists of particles that consist of even smaller particles. The search for even smaller particles seems endless. Viewed in this way, a human being is a collection of particles; if those particles fall apart, then a person no longer exists. According to science, death reigns: after all, everything eventually falls apart.

In the future, it will not be the parts, but the unit that will be the self-evident basis. The mechanical view of the universe and man then makes way for a holistic one; the idea of unity then becomes the new paradigm. From this idea of unity, science will start to accept that there is consciousness behind everything: the concepts of consciousness and unity will then coincide. And eternal death gives way to eternal life.

Psychology

The idea of unity will lead in psychology to recognition of the existence of the soul. This will be seen as a source of healing and truth. Healing of psychological problems will then coincide with awareness of the soul.

Politics

Because the unity of everything is taken for granted, this also has consequences for the political system. Countries and borders will gradually disappear, and with them wars. Eventually there will be a world government.

Economy

The sense of division that pervades human thinking has created an economy based on competition and exploitation of fellow humans and of the Earth herself. If we look at the current economic system from a distance, and see it as part of the Earth's ecosystem, we see that it behaves like a cancerous tumour towards that ecosystem. It is aimed at unreasonable growth and consumption of all available resources: taking without giving anything in return.

This economic system will no longer be able to exist in the future; the higher vibration of the new Earth offers no more possibilities for this. The economy of the future is a harmonious interaction between humans and Earth. Man receives from the Earth and gives to the Earth. There is mutual respect and cooperation.

This economy is based on gratitude and connectedness. Man is grateful to the Earth that he can stay here and experience wonderful things, and the Earth is grateful to man, because the uniqueness of man enriches it. Man not only understands, but also experiences that the Earth is a conscious living being. This gives a sense of connection that will eventually develop into a deep bond of love. And in the still distant future, humanity will eventually leave Earth deeply grateful.

Society

Our current society is essentially still a hierarchically organized machine. Upbringing, education, essentially still means that people are being primed to become a cog in that machine. The more important that cog is, the more successful that person is thought to be in our society. This is of course going to change.

The society of the future is not hierarchically ordered, but aimed at the blossoming of the human soul here on Earth. The result is happiness. Happiness for man himself, who can let the light of his soul shine, and happiness for his fellow man, who can enjoy the beautiful unique radiance of an incarnate angel; and at the same time happiness for the Earth herself, who sees a person – and humanity – blossom like a beautiful heavenly flower.

The Cosmos

The belief in division and duality not only results in the loneliness of modern man, but also causes humanity as a whole to be isolated in the cosmos.

This is going to change. We are on the threshold of a new and incredibly rich era. An era in which we will come into contact with many other civilizations in the cosmos. The increase in the vibration of the Earth means that at the top of the experiential space, all kinds of doors will open to other worlds: experiential spaces of other inhabitants of this cosmos. This will make us deeply realize how infinitely rich and vast the universe is. It is not only infinite in size, but also in richness, variety and beauty.

The above issues are of course global developments. What do they mean for the individual person?

Psychological consequences for the individual person

It is of course nice that, as a person, you grow along with the changes that the Earth is going through. But that is not a certainty. For people who are stuck in duality, that is even impossible because they are unable to let go of the belief in duality. If they can no longer experience that duality on Earth, they will seek out other realms of experience in the universe where they can, and leave Earth.

Of course there are also people who will effortlessly go along with the growth process of the Earth. These are people who have completed their personal cycle and are ready to embrace the unity consciousness. They are now engaged in lovingly integrating all their past lives, and understand that perpetrator lives are also part of that. From this awareness arises a deep sense of connection with everyone.

As long as we don't face our own fears, our own shadow, nothing will change; then we are stuck in this duality consciousness. Fear always divides the world in two: us versus them, or what we fear. Love transcends this and makes everything one again: connects with the other and connects with reality.

Right now, as the Earth is in a shift, it has consequences for people who are still very much in duality. The space to experience duality is diminishing and will eventually disappear. As this space is now shrinking, people who strongly believe in duality are increasingly trapped in a bubble.

Of course, support is then sought from like-minded people. However, they don't find love and friendship with them, just more duality, which only amplifies the fear and paranoia. The bubble becomes even more detached from the light.

It is important for outsiders to realize that someone living in such a bubble, however impossible and hostile he or she may behave, is essentially suffering and unhappy.

And what about evil?

The basis of the belief in duality is the existence of evil. That is what duality in the end is: good versus evil.

When you say that all is one, you are apt to deny the existence of evil. After all, one is good. And the fact that there is evil is, of course, hard to digest.

However, if all is one, this does not mean a negation of evil, but a denial of evil outside of us. Everything is one actually means: everything is in us.

When everything is one, everything is in me, and therefore evil is also in me. To say that all is one is therefore not a denial of evil, but an invitation to face the evil within ourselves – our shadow – and to take responsibility for it: to no longer place it outside of ourselves.

Look at the culprit in you and love him. We find inner peace by letting the perpetrators and victims in ourselves meet each other in the loving space that we are.

And this is the space that the new Earth is offering us.

This is the difference between a human and an angel. The man of the new Earth is an angel who has experienced and been evil. He therefore has a deep understanding and a deep love for all who are still struggling and suffering in duality.

Do not be afraid to become that Angel incarnate: look at your shadow and say 'yes' to it.

The new Earth awaits.

Enhancing your life with natural energy

🌿 Zoom Meeting 🌿

Jane has been interested in dowsing for most of her adult life. Her Mum was a dowsing practitioner and then after she met Peter Ruehmkorff in late 2003, dowsing became a large part of their life together; assisting Peter with his Dowsing and Radionics Seminars, and Environmental Property Surveys all around the country, for nearly 10 years.

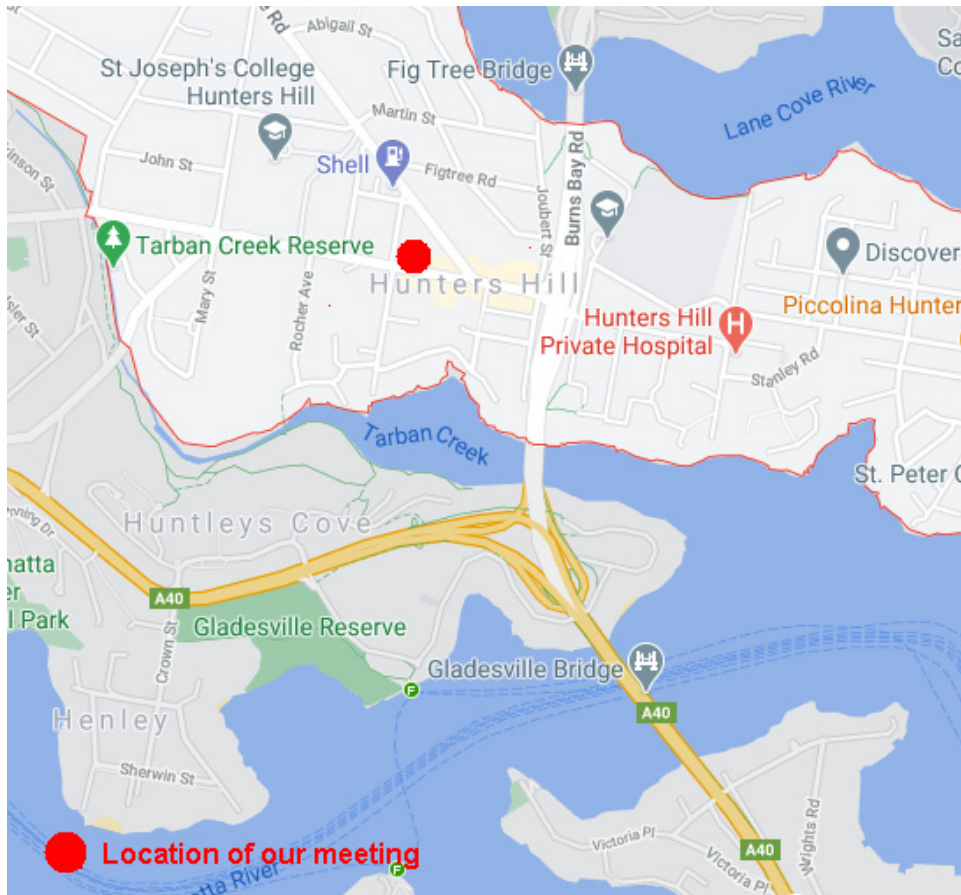

Jane was fortunate enough to be able to absorb some of Peter's extensive knowledge of dowsing, and together with her own common sense and keen eye for detail, they made a good team.

During their environmental property surveys, Peter would dowse the property with his V rod, and it was Jane's job to wander around the home with the client, explaining their process for improving ambience and energy of the home, and take note of anomalies or placements that seemed wrong and possibly needed rectifying.

She will offer ideas on healing with paper radionics, how to remove harmful entity attachments, identify unseen energies that are detrimental to human health and stepping lightly on Country.

This will include tips on improving the ambience in your home through using Dowsing, Feng Shui and Common Sense.
